

HAS THE WHITE HOUSETURNED AWAY FROM BONN?

4cc9

How do the two men who rule America and Germany regard each other today? The one so young and new to the game, but confident and determined; the other so old, shrewd and wise in the ways of men - der alte Fuchs - the Old Fox.

From these intimate camera studies of the two men taken during their White House meeting in November 1961, one startling fact is vividly revealed. Adenauer is no longer the grey eminence behind the American president, the position he enjoyed when the Eisenhower regime was in power. He comes to the meeting full of confidence; bland, smiling, believing in his ability to sway the inexperienced Kennedy over to his pre-planned schemes.

But the young President shows a lively awareness of his responsibilities. He is firm, unruffled, composed; seeking even to impose his own views on the old Chancellor. Their thoughts diverge; Adenauer soft-pedals, and goes home to think again. John Kennedy has shown his teeth.

CAMERA PRESS (W/B) LONDON.